A tropical cyclone is a storm system characterized by a large low-pressure center and a saturated air mass. Tropical cyclones can be fueled by a process called "warm core" storm surge. The center of a tropical cyclone is surrounded by a region of low pressure called the "eye". The tropical cyclone is a type of extratropical cyclone that originates in maritime tropical regions. The term "tropical cyclone" is used in the Atlantic and Eastern Pacific Oceans, while the term "hurricane" is used in the North Atlantic, Caribbean Sea, and northeastern Pacific Ocean. The term "typhoon" is used in the western Pacific and South China Sea, while the term "cyclone" is used in the Indian Ocean and the Bay of Bengal. Tropical cyclones can have devastating effects on coastal areas, causing flooding, damage to infrastructure, and loss of life.
